The cycle of violence, let's talk about it!

Hommes et Gars and Accalmie social workers can help you understand it more clearly

The following theme addresses the cycle of violence and the way it manifests itself

Remember that you are never alone

Resources are available to help you and accompany you—whether it is for you— or someone who is close to you.

They are listed at the end of this document.

The cycle of violence, what is it exatcly?

When violence settles within a relationship, we inevitably see a cycle appear...It is called the cycle of violence.

This cycle is put in place and used to gain control and power in a relationship.

It is difficult to detect its presence in the beginning of a relationship, as it takes place insidiously.

Recognizing the cycle is the first step to leave a violent relationship.

The cycle of violence, what does it look like?

In short, there is nothing really healthy about it...

The cycle of violence, what does it look like?

onase 1 - Tension

Abuser:

bursts of anger, threatening looks, silent treatment.

Victim:

feels anxious, attempts to alleviate the atmosphere and is careful about everything she says and does.

phase 4 - Reconciliation

Abuser:

asks for forgiveness,
offers to get therapy, threatens to
hurt himself and manipulates
the other so that he is pitied.

Victim:

gives the abuser another chance, tries to help him, acknowledges his efforts and changes her own behaviour. Phase 2 - Violence

Abuser:

uses one or more forms of violence; whether it be physical, verbal, psychological, sexual or economic, towards the victim.

Victim:

feels humiliated, hurt, and that the situation is unjust.

phase 3 - Justification

Abuser:

finds excuses to justify his behavior.

Victim:

tries to understand the explications, doubts her own perception, and feels confused and responsible for the situation.

And what happens next, is over and over again...

The consequences of violence

The presence of violence within a relationship can have disastrous consequences in the victim's life, as well as the abuser's.

Physical, sexual, psychological injuries...
In short, it is very rare that a victim gets out of a violent relationship unscathed.
The injuries can follow her throughout her entire life.

Concerning the abusers, they exposes themselves to very serious consequences if they do not stop their violent behaviour.

Here are a few of the consequences of violence

Consequences for the victim:

Low self-esteem Feeling ashamed and culpable School dropout (lack of concentration and isolation) Somatic symptoms (Gastrointestinal, muscle pain) Physical injuries Anxiety Depression Post-traumatic stress Suicidal thoughts Self-harm Eating disorders Drug and alcohol consumption Sleeping trouble Etc.

Consequences for the abuser:

Imprisonment
Stigmatization
Absenteeism (work, school)
School dropout
Loss of employment
Isolation and solitude
Suicide

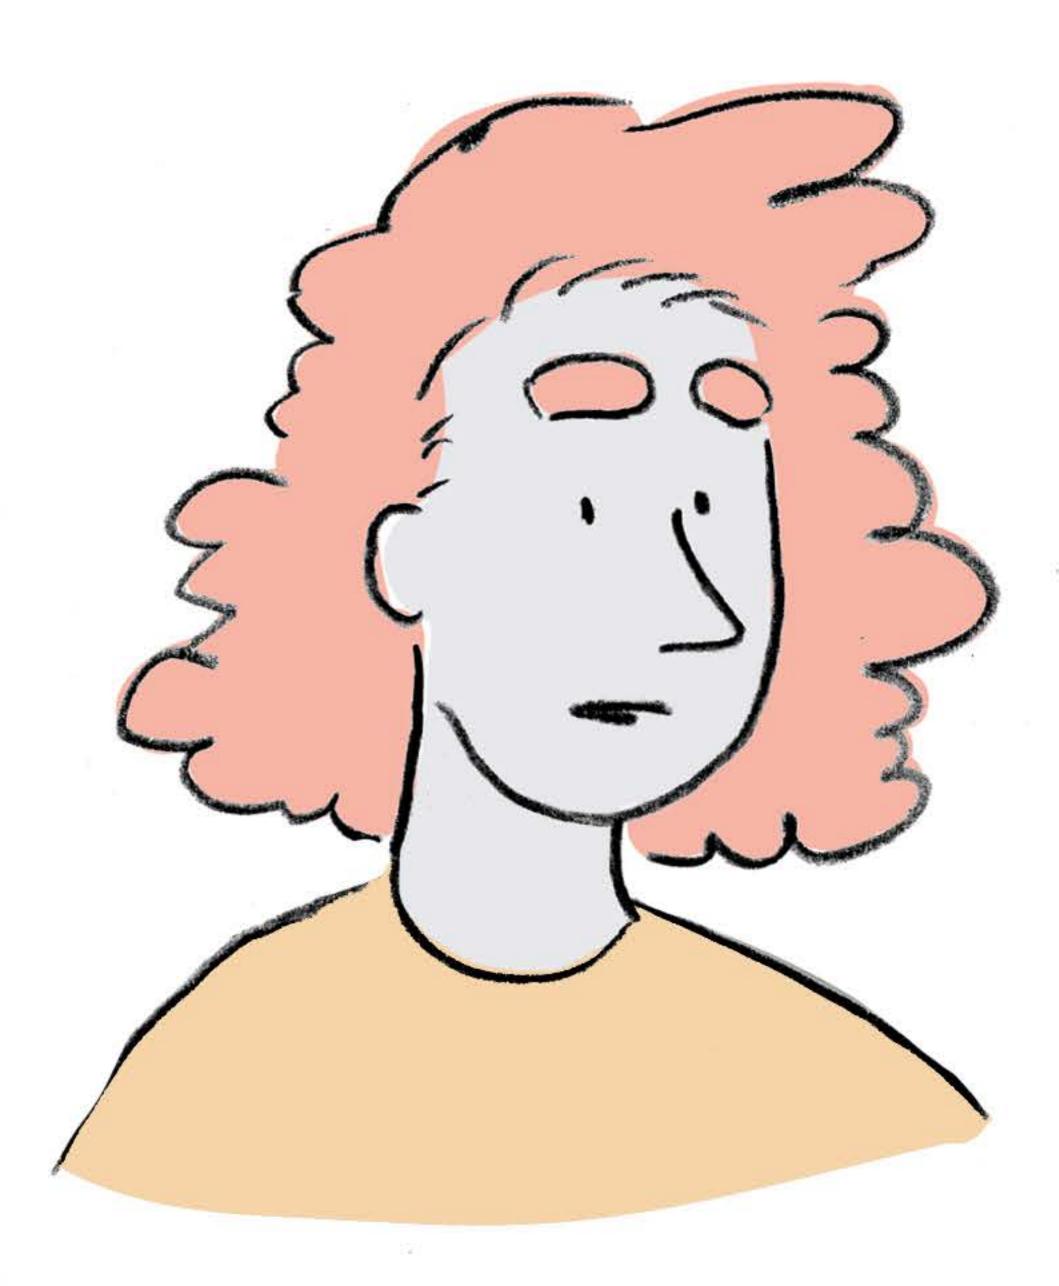

Etc.

The consequences of violence depend on each person. Every situation is unique.

Violence or argument? Here are some clarifications...

It can be difficult to distinguish one from the other. However, an argument is not necessarily a sign that you are experiencing violence in your relationship.

Here are the four criterias that can help you differentiate the two situations from each other.

Power Intent Persistance Impact

Contrary to violence, the two partners feel free to fully express themselves, despite the conflict. In a couple's argument, there can be moments of anger and frustration where our actions and words go too far.

Violence or argument? Here are some clarifications...

In an argument

In a situation containing violence

Each can share their point of views on the topic, even if there are moments of anger and frustration. The partners feel free and completely unafraid to express themselves.

Power

One partner seeks to dominate the other by using violent behaviour, (through the use of different forms of violence)

The intention surrounding the conflict is ultimately to convince the other of their point of view. There is no hidden or ulterior motive.

Intention

The intention behind the situation is to take control and violence is used in order to gain this power. Strategies are used to make this possible.

The conflict is occasional, even if the topic does continue to arise—there is no persistence or cycle.

Persistance

Violence is persistent, intensifies and becomes cyclic.

Both feel safe and free to express themselves

Impact

One of the partners feels a strong impact from the given situation; it creates a victim. Feelings of helplessness and fear settle.

Violent behaviour is always inacceptable, no matter what situation!

In short...

In your relationship, is there:

Mutual respect?

Empathy?

Ability to listen?

A freedom of expression?

A feeling of being safe?
